Presentation: Jane P. White, Executive Director
Michigan Human Trafficking Task Force

This presentation is focused for health care workers who are mandated under Michigan Law enacted in 2015 to receive training in human trafficking. Members of the community are also welcomed who wish to better understand what the meaning of modern-day slavery is in which victims can be children, adolescents and adults in both sexual and labor exploitation. Slavery is a flourishing global business today but so often not the picture that the media has falsely portrayed to the public. The community is so important in the involvement in the identification of vulnerabilities and insisting that there is collaboration present starting with preventative strategies. It is believed that every county in Michigan has had identified cases of human trafficking but it is so often hidden because of lack of factual information. The Task Force has over 135 member agencies working together and providing evidence-based and factual information.
